Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its twelfth session from 3 to 14 October 2011. The review of Trinidad and Tobago was held at the 5th meeting on 5 October 2011. The delegation of Trinidad and Tobago was headed by H.E. Ambassador Dennis Francis, Permanent Representative, Permanent Mission of the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago to the United Nations Offices at Geneva. At its 9th meeting held on 7 October 2011, the Working Group adopted the report on Trinidad and Tobago.
2. On 20 June 2011, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Trinidad and Tobago: the Philippines, United States of America, and Peru.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1, the following documents were issued for the review of Trinidad and Tobago:
 - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/12/TTO/1);
 - (b) A compilation prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/12/TTO/2 and A/HRC/WG.6/12/TTO/2/Corr.1);
 - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/12/TTO/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by the Netherlands, Slovenia and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Trinidad and Tobago through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the UPR.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. Trinidad and Tobago stated that it views the UPR process as a welcome opportunity to share with the international community and with the Council, its progress in human rights and to receive the Council's views on how best any gaps might be filled. It was added that since August 31, 1962, when Trinidad and Tobago became a sovereign, democratic State, it has adopted policies and practices to recognize and protect the fundamental rights and freedoms of its citizens. These rights are enshrined in its Constitution.
6. Trinidad and Tobago explained that in preparing for the review it had undertaken a thorough consultation process involving all the relevant stakeholders including Government Ministries and Departments and Civil Society organizations.
7. Trinidad and Tobago also indicated that the Government has given priority to the protection of women and children, poverty reduction and reducing the incidence of violent crime in Trinidad and Tobago. Additionally, it is committed to raising the standard of living of persons by enhancing the educational system, providing a higher level of accessibility and support to differently-abled persons and improving the welfare of those living with HIV/AIDS.

8. It was explained that, in an effort to stimulate public awareness and stem problems related to stigma and discrimination of those infected and affected by HIV/AIDS in the workplace, the Government has adopted a National Workplace Policy on HIV/AIDS and established an Advocacy and Sustainability Centre for its implementation. Additionally, the Equal Opportunity Amendment Bill, 2011 has been drafted to include in the various classifications of discrimination, HIV/AIDS and Age as categories under which protection should exist.

9. Regarding the issue of sexual orientation, Trinidad and Tobago explained further that, in a small society with very conservative values and deep religious traditions, effecting change to personal attitudes and community values is no easy task. This notwithstanding, it is noteworthy that in recent debates on the Statutory Authorities (Amendment) Bill, the need to have definitive deliberations to resolve issues related to the treatment of same sex couples was raised in the Parliament.

10. Trinidad and Tobago stated that the Government has made the reduction of violent crime a top priority. It has therefore taken drastic steps with the enactment of various pieces of legislation such as the Anti-Gang Act, 2011 and the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2011.

11. It was added in this regard that, in August 21st 2011, Prime Minister the Honourable Kamla Persad-Bissessar announced that the Government agreed to impose a State of Emergency to deal with escalating crime. In explaining the Government's rationale for the State of Emergency, the Prime Minister linked the recent surge in violent criminal activity to the success of the police in the seizure of large drug hauls and described the current situation in Trinidad and Tobago with the imposition of the State of Emergency as "a war on crime". The duration of the State of Emergency was initially declared for fifteen days, but has subsequently been extended for three months.

12. Trinidad and Tobago noted that it is mindful of the potential for the State of Emergency to impact on the civil liberties of the citizenry and has therefore put in place mechanisms to minimize intrusions including the requirement that security forces avoid abuse to the population. It was added that the Government has repeatedly stated in public that it has no intention of curtailing the constitutional freedoms and rights of the people of Trinidad and Tobago for a minute longer than is adjudged to be absolutely necessary.

13. Trinidad and Tobago indicated further that the Government has also established the Financial Intelligence Unit to focus specifically on transnational crime and has moved swiftly to make the country compliant with international standards through the enactment of the Anti-Terrorism (Amendment) Act, 2010, and the Interception of Communication Act, 2010 which criminalize the financing of terrorist activities.

14. Moreover, the Government has taken steps to protect its citizens from technology related crimes through the passage of the following laws: the Computer Misuse Act, 2000, the Electronic Transfer of Funds Crime Act, 2000 and the Data Protection Act, 2011, to afford protection to electronically-stored personal data.

15. It was highlighted that the Government is vigorously addressing the bottlenecks that exist in the judicial system particularly in relation to pre-trial detention. The Ministry of Justice is in the process of reviewing the Indictable Offences (Preliminary Enquiry) Act, 1917 with the goal, in principle, that once charged, accused persons should be brought before the Courts in one year.

16. On the issue of policing, Trinidad and Tobago noted that the Government has created a mechanism allowing members of the public to lodge complaints against police officers and to curb the use of unnecessary force by the police service. Additionally, the Police Service recently implemented the "Policing for People Initiative" to provide officers with the training required to improve the overall quality of policing. It has also been the practice in recent years for middle-rank officers of the Police Service to participate in regional training programmes on the relationship between human rights and policing.

17. Trinidad and Tobago then recalled that Section 4 (a) of the Constitution recognizes the right of the individual to life, liberty and the security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law. It added that Trinidad and Tobago, which retains the death penalty as part of its domestic legal system, is of the view that the application of the death penalty is a matter of criminal justice.

18. It was noted further that implementation of the Death Penalty has been in abeyance since 1999. The Government is currently reviewing its laws with respect to the Death Penalty and recently piloted the Constitutional (Amendment) (Capital Offences) Bill, 2011 to create three categories of murder limiting the death penalty to the most heinous crimes with life imprisonment as an alternative punishment. That legislation was defeated in the Parliament.

19. Trinidad and Tobago stated that the Government is mindful that support exists for the retention of the Death Penalty and that given the alarming murder statistics, the timing is not optimal for its repeal. It was further noted that the Government is also obliged to take into account the ruling of the Privy Council in the judgment of Charles Mathew v The State 2004, which determined that the sentence of death for murder in Trinidad and Tobago is mandatory and not discretionary. It was indicated that a vibrant debate persists within the national community on this issue to which Government must be sensitive.

20. On prisons, Trinidad and Tobago explained that various policy mechanisms are in place to protect and promote the rights of prisoners. The Penal Reform and Transformation Unit was established in 2002 to review the penal system. Since then, further reforms towards a system of restorative justice have been implemented. It was also noted that the treatment of prisoners is based on the UN Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. Moreover initiatives are underway to update these standards. Strategies have also been adopted to meet the needs of incarcerated parents in order to ensure that relationships with their children are maintained.

21. Trinidad and Tobago then indicated that, with a view to protecting the human rights of victims of human trafficking, illegal immigrants, undocumented workers, asylum seekers and refugee claimants, the State established in November 2009, the Immigration Detention Centre.

22. Trinidad and Tobago then addressed the social aspect of human rights promotion and protection. Regarding poverty reduction as it relates to women, the Ministry of Gender, Youth and Child Development has developed the "Women in Harmony" and the "Non-traditional Skills Training" programmes to improve the status of unskilled women who head households as single parents.

23. It was added that the State recognizes that more needs to be done to achieve gender equality and sensitivity throughout the society. Trinidad and Tobago highlighted that the coming to office of the Honourable Kamla Persad-Bissessar as the first female Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago telescopes important messages to the society about the multivariate contribution that women can make to the development of Trinidad and Tobago. The Prime Minister recently announced the adoption of a gender-sensitive formula for the allocation of financial resources in the budget for fiscal 2011/2012.

24. Moreover, a Gender Equity Institute has also been established with responsibility for the implementation of programmes and projects to advance gender equity and to promote the elimination of discrimination.

25. It was also stated that the Government recognizes that, as in any society, women fall victim to domestic violence, sexual harassment and other forms of emotional and verbal abuse. Accordingly, in addition to specific legislation covering many of these offences, women are also protected under the Sexual Offences Act, 1986.
26. Trinidad and Tobago has adopted and strengthened its policies to promote the better integration of differently-abled persons into society while preserving their independence and dignity. A Disability Affairs Unit and a National Coordinating Committee on Disability are established and functioning. Moreover, a Draft National Policy on Persons with Disabilities and a Draft Disabilities Bill are under consideration.
27. Trinidad and Tobago also referred to the Government's initiative to improve the standard of living of the differently-abled, is the availability of fully-funded home care and assistance from health care professionals. Additionally, special provision has been made for the integration of children living with disabilities into the educational system.
28. Trinidad and Tobago stated that the Government regards the protection of the human rights of its children as an extremely serious matter and strongly believes that children are not mini-human beings with mini-human rights. Thus, along with various programmes, grants and activities geared towards child development, the Children's Life Fund with the accompanying legislation, the Children's Life Fund Act, 2010 have been established.
29. Trinidad and Tobago then noted that while the defense of the rights of children is an ongoing national concern, society in the country has traditionally practised corporal punishment as a legitimate form of discipline for youngsters. It was added that this is of concern to the Government and that practical steps have been taken to reverse it. The Ministry of Education, in its National School Code of Conduct, May 2009, specifically forbids the use of corporal punishment.
30. Moreover it was indicated that currently, the Children's Bill 2011 is being considered by the Cabinet as a preparatory step to having it laid in Parliament. This Bill will address the sale of children, child pornography, and child prostitution. Additionally, under the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2011, child pornography is a form of criminal exploitation.
31. Trinidad and Tobago then noted that as a Small Island Developing State, it is cognizant of the distinct link between global climate change and human rights. Thus, with financial assistance from the European Union, the Office of Disaster Preparedness and Management produced a Hyogo Framework-compatible National Response Framework related to the management of natural disasters.
32. Trinidad and Tobago further indicated that the Ministry of the Attorney General in conjunction with the Equal Opportunities Commission is in the process of developing a nation-wide human rights awareness campaign. A feasibility study was conducted to determine the most effective mechanism to reach the widest demographic by the International Law and Human Rights Unit of the Ministry.
33. It was highlighted that two specific Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) where Trinidad and Tobago has made significant progress is the reduction of extreme poverty and surpassing the target for universal primary education, with citizens now benefitting from free pre-school, primary, secondary and tertiary education. Trinidad and Tobago declared nevertheless the it is conscious of the challenges that remain. It must be borne in mind that national capacity to fully implement certain human rights obligations are constrained by increased pressure on available national resources. The Government of Trinidad and Tobago therefore wished to express its appreciation to its international partners for their support for national development initiatives.

34. Trinidad and Tobago noted that its National Report details the country's commitments, priorities, achievements and challenges. It welcomed an engaging dialogue with the Council, and stated that it was keen to hear recommendations as it looked forward to a fruitful discourse. Trinidad and Tobago's commitment to continue to work purposively on human rights issues and maintaining a high level of ambition accordingly was underscored.

35. Trinidad and Tobago recognized, however, that ensuring respect for international human rights and meeting its obligations under various international treaties is a continuous and complex process. It was added that Trinidad and Tobago was prepared to undertake an objective evaluation of the comments and recommendations of members of the Council with a view to assisting in further strengthening the national framework for the promotion and protection of human rights.

36. In closing, Trinidad and Tobago restated the Government's full commitment to furthering its efforts to address any identifiable gaps in implementation. It was recalled that, as proudly declared in Trinidad and Tobago's National Anthem, every creed and race, must find an equal place in Trinidad and Tobago. It was added that while not explicitly stated in those words, in modern Trinidad and Tobago, the Government is resolute in its belief that, so too must gender.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

37. During the interactive dialogue, 38 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

38. Algeria noted Trinidad and Tobago's engagement with human rights manifested in its programs, notably the Program of Financial Aid for needy patients and for those suffering chronic diseases. It noted the "eConnect and Learn" program, as well as its considerable advances in the fight against discrimination. It noted that the situation of women remained a challenge. It made recommendations.

39. Sri Lanka commended Trinidad and Tobago for the National Cultural Policy based on respect for ethnic and cultural diversity. It noted the reduction of extreme poverty and the achievement of the MDG on education and welcomed its commitment to providing free public education. It hoped that the Children's Bill will be passed. Sri Lanka commended Trinidad and Tobago for providing State funded medication for non-communicable diseases. Sri Lanka made recommendations.

40. Singapore noted that Trinidad and Tobago had made remarkable progress achieving Millennium Development Goals. It welcomed Trinidad and Tobago commitments' to poverty reduction and economic growth. Singapore noted that Trinidad and Tobago provides free education to all. Singapore commended Trinidad and Tobago for improving the legal and operational framework of child protection. Singapore made recommendations.

41. Malaysia commended Trinidad and Tobago for its commitment to improve socio-economic development. It noted that Trinidad and Tobago made progress towards meeting the MDG goals. Malaysia also noted that Trinidad and Tobago had implemented new measures to safeguard and protect the security of its citizens from criminal activity and inquired how such legislation could mitigate the impact of criminal activity. Malaysia made recommendations.

42. Cuba noted Trinidad and Tobago's progress in the fields of health and education, despite the challenges that persist in the Caribbean country. It noted the country had achieved universal primary and secondary education and achieved goal 3 of the third Millennium Development Goal by eliminating disparities between sexes in primary and secondary education. It also highlighted the “eConnect and Learn” program and the creation of the Fund for Life of Children and programs for the treatment of non-transmissible diseases, cancer and anti-retroviral drugs. It made recommendations.

43. United Kingdom welcomed the government’s ongoing review of the death penalty. It hoped that the adoption of a multi-tiered classification for murder will hand presiding judges the power to make a decision on sentencing, and preclude the mandatory imposition of the death penalty. It recognized the work undertaken to address discrimination against women. It asked when existing legislation on sexual harassment and violence against women will be implemented and when specialized rape and Sexual Offences Units will become operational within police stations. It noted that measures concerning a State of Emergency should be fully justified and used only in exceptional circumstances. It made recommendations.

44. France noted that Trinidad and Tobago was party to a number of international and regional human rights instruments and that its Constitution recognized fundamental rights and freedoms. It noted that even if the last execution in the country was in 1999, the death penalty was still in force. It welcomed the establishment of an independent and impartial entity to deal with police complaint, noting however its mandate remained undefined. France also noted that certain provisions of the Criminal Code criminalize sexual relations between consenting adults of the same sex. It made recommendations.

45. Slovenia commended the Government for the establishment of the national steering committee for the prevention and elimination of child labor and encouraged it to continue its efforts on this field. Slovenia noted that it is not a party of some core universal human rights treaties, such as CAT, OP-ICESCR, ICCPR-OP 2 and some others. Slovenia regretted that the government decided to denounce ICCPR-OP1. It made recommendations.

46. Nicaragua noted Trinidad and Tobago’s progress in the construction of a solid legislative and institutional framework. It noted that despite the current global economic and financial crisis, Trinidad and Tobago had kept its priorities and congratulated it for its social programs. It highlighted health and education programs and financial assistance to the most vulnerable. It also highlighted the country’s achievements in security for citizens through weapons control, fight against drug trafficking, terrorism and human trafficking. It made recommendations.

47. Australia welcomed the government’s commitment to better protect the rights of women, children, the elderly and the disabled, and to advance to economic and social rights of its citizens. Australia continued to be concerned by reports of excessive use of police force and by reports on the treatment of detainees. Australia encouraged Trinidad and Tobago to thoroughly investigate claims by members of the public of extra-judicial killings by police, and urged to make the findings of these investigations public. It urged Trinidad and Tobago to establish a moratorium on the death penalty as interim measure towards full abolition. It made recommendations.

48. Canada commended the establishment of the Victim Support Units within the Police Service, but raised its concern over the issue of violence against women and children. It regretted that death sentences continued to be handed down by courts and was concerned at the Bill aimed at reforming the Constitution regarding the death penalty. It was also concerned about reports of problems related to the police force as well as the persistence of discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity. It made recommendations.

49. New Zealand noted that successive governments had repudiated the use of torture and acknowledged the need to make improvements in prison conditions. It also noted that the government is currently considering a draft national policy on persons with disabilities and as well as a draft disabilities bill. Additionally, it highlighted that girl children deserve protection from early marriage and noted that violence against women remained a problem.

It suggested that prevention of HIV/AIDS infection becomes easier when sexual relations between same sex adults are legal. It made recommendations.

50. Brazil commended Trinidad and Tobago for its progress towards achieving MDGs, such as the elimination of gender disparity in education. It noted that in 2010, it had elected its first female Prime Minister and commended the introduction of strategies to increase the number of women in decision-making bodies. It expressed concern over the high incidence of violence against women and praised the establishment of the Victim Support Units. It also commended the country's HIV/AIDS policy. It made recommendations.

51. Ghana applauded Trinidad and Tobago for its provision of free education from primary to tertiary levels. It also commended the wide array of social intervention schemes and legal frameworks, including the domestication of international conventions in support of the weak in society. It noted the incidence of violent crime in the country. It made recommendations.

52. Regarding questions and observations on the death penalty, Trinidad and Tobago drew attention to the fact that though no declaratory statement had been made by the Government on a moratorium on the death penalty, in fact, since 1999 there has been a functional moratorium on such penalties which have not been implemented since that year. It was added that a rich debate within the Government and society regarding this issue is continuing. Trinidad and Tobago noted that in a situation where violent crime is widespread it is a great challenge for a Government to risk giving the impression that it is not adequately combating crime.

53. On violence against women, Trinidad and Tobago acknowledged that this remains an area of concern and that the Government is committed to dealing with this issue. Nevertheless, there were resource constraints, particularly regarding the ability to fund the mechanisms and facilities that afford protection to women in such situations. Therefore, this gap tends to be filled by NGOs with the support of the Government. It was clarified that some victim support units have been established within police service. Moreover, awareness exists of the importance of sensitizing the police establishment regarding this issue.

54. Germany noted that Trinidad and Tobago had imposed a state of emergency in August 2011 in response to violent crime. It understood the country's preoccupation with the high crime rate but noted concerns over unjustified violence during arrests. It asked how the country plans to step up efforts to ensure the observance of human rights standards by security forces. It noted an initiative for constitutional reform in order to render the death penalty legally feasible again and expressed concern over the criminalization consensual same-sex relations between adults. It made recommendations.

55. Uruguay noted Trinidad and Tobago's efforts to achieve the MDGs, especially its advances in the reduction of extreme poverty, free education, and the elimination of gender disparity in education. It expressed concern over stereotypes regarding men and women in society and family, as well as the presence of gender violence. It noted that the death penalty in the country is only applied in cases of homicide and treason and was suspended since 1999. It noted the revision of the law that forbids corporal punishment. Uruguay made recommendations.

56. Slovakia commended Trinidad and Tobago for the establishment of the National Steering Committee for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour. It also took a positive note of the support rendered by the government towards the organization of the regional workshop on establishing national human rights institutions in compliance with the Paris Principles, in cooperation with OHCHR, this year. Slovakia made recommendations.

57. South Africa commended the attention afforded by Trinidad and Tobago to the advancement of economic, social and cultural rights. It noted concerns expressed by CRC related to education such as inadequate infrastructure, material shortages in schools and reports of classroom violence and asked for further information on the steps taken in this regard. South Africa welcomed the priority given to the health sector. It inquired on steps taken to address the high rate of infant and maternal mortality and efforts undertaken to strengthen prenatal and postnatal care. It made recommendations.

58. Turkey commended efforts by Trinidad and Tobago to achieve millennium development goals 2 and 3. It also noted that Trinidad and Tobago was the first country in the world to adopt legislation for the recording and economic valuation of the unremunerated work by women. Turkey welcomed the enactment of the Anti-Terrorism Act, the Interception of Communications Act and the Financial Intelligence Unit. Turkey appreciated the ongoing public debate and government consideration regarding the limitation of the death penalty only to certain types of crime. It made a recommendation.

59. Argentina welcomed Trinidad and Tobago's significant progress this year towards the approval of legislation to prevent human trafficking and for the achievements seen in political participation of women. It made recommendations.

60. Hungary expressed appreciation of recent efforts to combat criminal activity through the implementation of various measures, including the adoption of the 2011 Anti-Gang Act and the 2011 Trafficking in Persons Act. Hungary was concerned about widespread allegations of excessive use of force by law enforcement and prison officers, including alleged unlawful killings and ill-treatment cases. It applauded efforts to address child abuse and negligence, although it regrets that the Children's Authority Act has not been fully implemented. It made recommendations.

61. Spain welcomed Trinidad and Tobago's progress in the democratization of its institutions and encouraged it to continue achieving better levels of well-being for its citizens. It noted in particular efforts to offer universal access to primary and secondary education. It made recommendations.

62. China recognized achievements in protecting human rights, noting particularly progress in gender equality, promoting education and development, protecting the rights of the child and protecting victims of domestic violence. China was conscious of the numerous difficulties facing Trinidad and Tobago as a developing country. It appealed to the international community to provide constructive support to Trinidad and Tobago. China suggested that Trinidad and Tobago will remain committed to reducing poverty, removing the gap between the rich and poor, and providing better social security to people in poverty.

63. Maldives inquired on measures being considered to strengthen safeguards for young women in relation to the prevention of teen pregnancies. Additionally it inquired how the OHCHR could help in current efforts to eliminate violence against women. It also asked for the government's view on how working with national and international NGOs and the treaty body mechanism could strengthen its custodial and penitentiary system to prevent torture. Finally, it asked for elaboration on how the adverse effects of climate change affect the enjoyment of human rights. It made recommendations.

64. Ecuador congratulated Trinidad and Tobago for its efforts, underpinned by political stability and economic growth. It highlighted advances in the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, the ratification of a good part of international human rights conventions, approval of legislation to allow for better access to justice, implementation of social programs, especially those related to vulnerable peoples; and initiatives to achieve gender equality and end racial discrimination. It welcomed the election of the country's first female Prime Minister. It made recommendations.

65. Romania noted that Trinidad-Tobago is a vibrant democracy and welcomed the commitment towards meeting the Millennium Development Goals. It appreciated the fact that the national report identifies the challenges in the human rights protection and promotion system. It congratulated the country for the establishment of comprehensive system for protection of human rights and the action of the government to ensure the economic, social, and cultural rights. It made recommendations.
66. Chile highlighted Trinidad and Tobago's advances in its human rights agenda, particularly in economic, social and cultural rights. It also highlighted the creation of policies for disaster risk reduction. It noted that the country had achieved the second Millennium Development Goal on universal education. It highlighted "eConnect and Learn" program and congratulated the country for its measures to promote gender equality, in particular for its first female Prime Minister. It made recommendations.
67. Republic of Latvia noted that country has cooperated with special procedures mandate holders. It also noted that special rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions has expressed willingness to visit Trinidad and Tobago in 2006; however, this request has not been accepted yet. It made a recommendation.
68. Mexico recognized Trinidad and Tobago's progress in poverty reduction and the achievement of gender equality in primary and secondary education. It noted with satisfaction the country's long-term vision through its "seven pillar" strategy to promote sustainable development. It made recommendations.
69. Regarding questions concerning violence in the school system, Trinidad and Tobago stated that this is an issue of grave concern and that the Government has established a violence prevention programme in primary and secondary system which has begun to yield results.
70. On legislation for the elimination of gender based violence, it was clarified that several existing laws address this phenomenon. Trinidad and Tobago added that such behaviour is not acceptable in society and that increasingly intervention programmes targeting men have been implemented in the community.
71. On the issue of criminalization of same sex activity, it was clarified that such laws are not enforced though it was acknowledged that there were very entrenched views in some sectors of society regarding this matter. Nevertheless a dialogue on this issue has begun.
72. Regarding immigration laws and sexual orientation and on migrants in general, it was explained that the immigration laws are being reviewed and it is not yet clear what the result of this review will be. Moreover a new policy to afford easier access to HIV care and services for migrants was being developed.
73. On questions regarding the mandatory age for education, it was clarified that the law that currently states that that age to be from 5 to 12 years will be changed to 5 to 16 under the Children's Bill and that the practice is already widely so. Regarding gender equity, it was noted that in Trinidad and Tobago women have, over the last decade, consistently performed much better than men, a phenomenon which is a challenge.
74. On the issue of climate change, Trinidad and Tobago provided details of the recent changes and effects of this phenomenon on the country, particularly rising food prices resulting from flooding, and action taken by the Government in this regard.

75. Guatemala congratulated Trinidad and Tobago for its progress in poverty reduction and in combating crime through its 2001 Anti-Gang Law. It also congratulated the country for its achievements in the field of education and the Millennium Development Goals, especially for free primary and secondary education and for eliminating gender disparity in education. It encouraged the Government to continue cooperating with the Treaty Bodies and Committees by presenting its reports. It made recommendations.

76. Morocco welcomed the fact that Trinidad and Tobago was ranked third in the ranking of the best place to raise a girl, in the 2001 study entitled "Because you are a girl, Growing up in the commonwealth". Morocco encouraged the government to move forward in the draft of national gender policy. It noted measures undertaken towards persons with disabilities and welcomed the initiative "direct effect" which refers to both the disabled and elderly. Morocco welcomed the national policy on Aging launched in 2007. Regarding this, it asked for more information on the twelve areas of intervention of the state outlined in the report. It made recommendations.

77. Israel commended Trinidad and Tobago's open society and noted that rule of law and adherence to fundamental human rights and freedoms were priorities to the Government. It applauded the country's efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, particularly with regard to poverty reduction, provision of education and welfare of citizens living with HIV/AIDS. It welcomed the 2001 Trafficking in Persons Act and made recommendations.

78. Costa Rica noted that there is a strong institutional framework in Trinidad and Tobago which allows it the implementation of policies consistent with the rule of law, the development of democracy and the administration of justice. Costa Rica congratulated Trinidad and Tobago for the emphasis placed on providing education at all levels and it recognized its efforts made to comply with the ILO Conventions. Costa Rica made recommendations.

79. Jamaica noted efforts made and Trinidad and Tobago's commitment to the principle of the rule of law, constitutional guarantees and legal safeguards. It indicated that, as Caribbean nations, they are faced with unique and structural challenges due to their geographical location and physical size, which poses unique challenges for its development. Jamaica noted the challenges Trinidad and Tobago has identified, particularly, violent crime exacerbated by the scourge of narco- trafficking. Jamaica asked for more information about the steps that the government is taking on the challenges associate with gender and education and care for the elderly.

80. Barbados acknowledged the Trinidad and Tobago's efforts to improving housing standards for most vulnerable, its efforts at promoting gender equality, the rights of children, persons with disabilities and decent work for all including the adoption of the minimum wages order 2010. It noted steps to review legislation so as to ensure due process and the equal treatment of all before the law. It highlighted the difficulties in policing, noting the illicit proliferation of small arms, drug trafficking and the presence of organized transnational criminal gangs which severely undermines the capacity of resource constrained states and underscored the need for greater collaboration at both the national and international level in addressing issues of crime and violence. It called on the international community to assist the efforts of small states in addressing this issue where possible.

81. Indonesia took note of the various mechanisms instituted by the government in protecting human rights, including the Police Complaints Authority, Advisory Committee on the Power of Pardon, Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Advisory Committee Centre, and Penal Reform and Transformation Unit. It applauded efforts to reform the prison system, and implement policies for the fulfilment of the right to health, to housing, and to education as there is free education for all children all the way through the tertiary level. It also commended the efforts to fulfil the rights of persons with disabilities. It made recommendations.

82. Nigeria noted the Government's recognition of the link between health and human development and commended the country for the policies it has put in place to enable it to enjoy the right to health. It applauded the government for eliminating the incidence of Mother-to-Child transmission of the HIV virus in Tobago and reducing this to 3% in Trinidad by last year. Nigeria noted that Trinidad and Tobago is not a signatory to the Convention against Torture. It commended the government for the measures it has taken to safeguard the security of its citizens. Nigeria made recommendations.

83. United States commended Trinidad and Tobago for its commitment to human rights, including significant efforts to expand access to education and healthcare, assist those with disabilities, and create greater safeguards for those with HIV/AIDS. It looked forward to further cooperation to strengthen human rights in the country and throughout the region. However, the United States noted that significant challenges related to the growth of crime continue to undermine the full protection of human rights in the country. This includes the use of extreme force by police, allegations of violations of due process, and poor prison conditions. It made recommendations.

84. Trinidad and Tobago stated that it has always placed great emphasis on establishing a strong and efficient judicial system though some problems exist, such as a shortage of judges and magistrates which can lead to delays and other problems. The Government is now addressing this issue and has given it top priority.

85. In conclusion, Trinidad and Tobago thanked the members of the Human Rights Council for a very rich discussion. It was stated that the Government was open to an objective evaluation of all the recommendations received and would take on board recommendations that are within its capacity to implement in the short term while examining the practical reality of implementing others within the context of its resource constraints and human resource capability. Trinidad and Tobago took note of recurring themes such as the death penalty, violence against women and girls and complaints of the alleged use of excessive force by the police, especially in the context of the current state of emergency.
